Caterease Contributes to Hurricane Katrina Victims

For Immediate Release
Monday, September 12, 2005

Naples, Florida –

As the whole world grappled with the troubling images and stories that emerged from last month's terrible disaster in the Gulf Coast, Caterease Software joined the growing list of companies doing whatever they can to lend a hand.

Shortly after Hurricane Katrina and its aftermath, owners at the event management software company offered to match employee contributions to the American Red Cross. To date, donations have averaged more than $330 per employee – an astoundingly generous amount.

“We’re no strangers down here to hurricane devastation,” says Chris Kopriva, Caterease Director of Training. “We’re lucky in Naples that we rarely get a direct hit. But we often see destruction all around us. We just wanted to do something to help out.”

Caterease Sales Representative George Selden, whose contribution was the largest single-employee amount, insisted the collection was strictly a group effort. “We all wanted to get the pot as high as we could since the owners had offered to double it,” Selden says. “It was great to see that every dollar you could put in there would mean two dollars going to the Red Cross.”

As the cleanup from Katrina continues, Caterease employees continue to contribute in other ways, such as private donations and attending local fund-raising events.

“Like everyone else in the country, our hearts and prayers are with the hurricane victims,” says Kopriva. “Everything you do at a time like this seems so small. But it’s also at a time like this when all of those small things can add up to something big.”
